The Future of Water in Flagstaff – Considering the Options

Flagstaff resources Manager, Erin Young will guide you through the complex world of ensuring a safe, and secure water supply remains available to the City of Flagstaff

This includes how the city is able to directly deliver reclaimed water to customers, how advanced treatment of reclaimed water can be used to refill aquifers or even Upper Lake Mary, how improvements in water treatment have allowed new drinking water source alternatives. As well as how the city is working, to develop new water sources (such as Red Gap Ranch)

Where Does your Stormwater Go? New Rules to Protect your Watershed

Have you ever thought about what happens when stormwater, rain or snowmelt, makes its way to drainages and eventually to the Rio de Flag? The City of Flagstaff does not treat stormwater. It can pick up contaminants, such as animal wastes, automotive fluids, landscape chemicals and any other pollutants collected on the ground on its journey to our watershed. Find out how you can help prevent pollutants and contaminants from making their way into the stormwater system, and the new rules established to protect this water resource

Join Steve Camp, Flagstaff Water Services Regulatory Compliance Manger, and water managers from NAU and Coconino County to discuss Stormwater Management rules, and the Municipal Separate Storm Sewer System (MS4) permits associated with it.

Water Quality – Keeping your Water Treated, Tested and Safe

The City of Flagstaff Water Services manages two surface water treatment plants, and several groundwater production wells to provide drinking water. We also manage two water reclamation plants to assure safe treatment of wastewater and produce a reliable source of reclaimed water. Are you ever curious as to what sampling goes into making sure the drinking water and reclaimed water are safe? Here is an opportunity to hear about the sampling and testing conducted on the City's water supplies.

Steve Camp, Flagstaff Water Services Regulatory Compliance Manger, will provide an overview of the testing process, address the safety of your water and answer questions.
